Every year, more than 50,000 New Zealanders develop sepsis, a life-threatening uncontrolled immune response to an infection, causing the body to damage its own tissues and organs. YOU can help raise awareness whilst protecting your staff and their whānau.

Up to 80% of deaths are preventable with earlier recognition, yet awareness remains dangerously low. More New Zealanders die from sepsis than from road accidents, yet most people don't recognise the signs until it's too late.

The New Zealand Sepsis Trust exists to change that. We raise public and healthcare awareness of sepsis, support survivors and families, and work with decision-makers to ensure sepsis remains a national health priority. We are the only organisation focused solely on sepsis in this country, and rely entirely on donations.
